

I feel that if you end a business relationship with a company you are finished with them and really don't care to have them bugging you on the phone. After all, if you want to do business with them you know where they are and how to contact them. Why should they be allowed to call you? I say make them follow the telemarketing rules.